Mt. Baker-Snoqualmie Forest Supervisor Retires

Don R. Campbell, Forest Supervisor of the Mt. Baker-Snoqualmie National Forest headquartered at Seattle, will retire December 30, it was announced today by Regional Forester R.E. Worthington, Pacific Northwest Region, USDA Forest Service.

No successor has been chosen for Campbell, Worthington said.

Campbell has been in the position since 1974 when the Snoqualmie and Mt. Baker Forests were consolidated. He was Supervisor of the Snoqualmie National Forest before that, moving there in 1970 after serving three years as Supervisor of the Okanogan National Forest in Eastern Washington.

Campbell began his Forest Service career in 1959 on the Ochoco National Forest, Prineville, Oregon. He subsequently served as a district ranger on the Ochoco and staff officer on the Siuslaw National Forest, Corvallis, before being chosen head of the Okanogan Forest in 1967. He is a graduate of Utah State University and veteran of World War II. Prior to his Forest Service career, Campbell served with the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Bureau of Land Management in New Mexico. He was a range manager and district manager for BLM.
